

Boardman Register Report

The Boardman/Boreman family of Connecticut and Boardman family of the Boston area are in no way related^[15]. Surname variations include: Boardman, Boarman, Bordman, Boman, Boreman, Boadman and Bourdman. By and large, the family surname was spelled "Bordman" in the 17th and early 18th centuries, then switched to "Boardman".

G. Andrews Moriarty, Jr. in his article on the family published in the 1923 issue of the New England Historic Genealogical Register [77:306-312] stated that "...[t]he Bordman or Boardman family which forms the subject of this article apparently did not settle in the English Cambridge until the later years of the 16th century. The family was probably of Lancashire origin, the surname is frequently found in the parish registers of Bolton, near Manchester, which, unfortunately, do not begin until 1592, and in this family the Christian names of Andrew and Giles are often used...^[1]"

First Generation

1. [not known]¹ BOARDMAN. We know nothing of this couple, save their children. His name might have been "Richard", given that his son Andrew named his first son "Richard" and saved his own name for the next two boys. However, this is sheer speculation on my part.

They had the following children:

William emigrated on the John from London to America in 1638. He was admitted a Freeman in 1652 and, with his wife Frances, joined the church in Cambridge, Middlesex co., MA sometime before 1643, when their daughter Rebecca was baptized in the Church at Cambridge.

Originally, he was a tailor^[11] in Cambridge, Middlesex co., MA. Eventually, he became the fourth steward of Harvard University -- appointed in 1663 and resigned in December of 1667. After his resignation, he remained employed as college cook until his death. His title of Major probably came from his office of steward (e.g. "Major-Domo") and not from service in the militia^[11]. Several of his descendants held the office of steward of Harvard University and held high offices in the Colonial government^[15].

"As early as 1656, he owned and occupied the estate at the easterly corner of Harvard Square and Dunster Street. At the death of [Stephen] Day in 1668, he came into possession of the estate on the opposite corner, to which his son Aaron added the adjoining land, extending to Brighton Street. Both these estates remained in the Bordman family about a hundred and fifty years." (Paige, History of Cambridge, p. 490)^[11]. Today, those lots lay smack dab in the middle of Harvard Square.

In 1659, his stepfather paid to him a legacy of £50 left to him by his father and acknowledged that it should have been "paid to him twenty-three years agone"^[11]. Finally, William deposed on 26 August 1672, aged 57 y^[11].

Before 1640 when William was 24, he married Frances [surname not known], in Cambridge, Middlesex co., MA^[6,7,16,17,18,19,20,21].
