Surname variations include: Farrington, Farington, Farrinton, Farinton, Fareington & ffarrington [sic].

First Generation

1. Edmund¹ FARRINGTON was born circa 1588 in Olney, Buckinghamshire, England^[1,2]. His birth year is estimated from the fact that he was aged 47 when he migrated in 1635. Edmund died in Lynn, Essex co., MA as "Farrington, Edmond on 20d:11m(January):1670; he was 82^[2,3,4].^{2,3,4}.

Edmund; his wife, Elizabeth; and their children, Sarah, John, Elizabeth, Mathew & Martha migrated from England to America aboard the Hopewell; of London, William Bundocke, master, embarking 1-6 April 1635 and sailing from London, Middlesex, England on 6 April 1635 and arriving in Boston, Suffolk co., MA in June 1635^[6]. Their children, Thomas, Edward and Joseph stayed in England. They are listed on the ship's manifest as "Edmond Farrington of Oney 47, his wife Elizabeth 49, and their children Sarra 14, Mathew 12, John 11, and Elizabeth 8"^[21]. Edmond had taken the oath of Allegiance^[1]. These records are currently located in Westminster Hall, London.

Edmond settled immediately in Lynn, Essex co., MA and became a Farmer, the Owner of the "well known tidemill in Lynn" and a Fellmonger^[5,6]. A Fellmonger both prepared hides (especially sheep hides) by removing the hair from them and drying them and also one who was a dealer for hides & skins. Edmond was not educated and could only "sign by mark" to the Southampton documents^[7] and his own will. His occupation as "Fellmonger" is substantiated by court documents of 1 December 1654, in which William Lyon, the son of John Lyon of Marblehead, said in court that he was apprenticed to "Edmond Farrinton of Lyn, fellmonger" for a period of eleven years^[6,8]. He later also became the Corn Miller in Lynn, when he built the aforementioned tidemill.

He contributed greatly to the establishment of the new settlement of Lynn and was granted 200 acres of land in the 1638 Land Distribution of Lynn^[23,25]. This was one of the larger land grants and indicated that Edmond had contributed a great deal of money to the town during its founding. His parcel was west of Myrtle and Federal Streets and he established his homestead partly on the western side of Federal Street and partly on the western side of Myrtle Street in an area known as "Farrington's Field".

Edmund was also one of the investors in the settlement of Southampton, Long Island, NY -- along with Allen Breed, Thomas Newhall and Edmund Needham, among others. In 1640, nine original undertakers were sent by Governor Winthrop to sail from Lynn, Essex co., MA and make the first English settlement in what became Southampton, Long Island, New York. Some claim that he was one of the original 9 undertakers to travel there; however, there is no extant concrete evidence that he actually went there^[11,30]. They mistakenly landed on Dutch Territory and six of the nine men were briefly detained by the Dutch. Eventually all was sorted out and the settlement on Long Island thrived.

Edmund had initially served in the local militia but on 3 July 1646, he and Robert Mansfield were "freed from common training, keeping their arms complete"^[22,23]. He was later fined for not training with the militia, but appealed and on 26 December 1648, "Edmund Farrington, on account of age, at his request," was freed from fine for not training^[23,24]. He was fifty years old at the time.

"Ed. Farington" was owed money -- the amount was not specified -- in the estate inventory of Abraham Belknap of Lynn, Essex co., MA on 16d:12m(February):1643^[9].

On 14 November 1648, Edmund & Joseph Armitage stood as sureties for the good behavior of Thomas Beale, who was fined for abusing the Lynn watch^[10]. On 15 November 1648, Edmund Farrington and other Lynn men were fined for failing to fence their share of the common field against "great cattle"^[11,12].

On 27 March 1649, Edmund Farrington sued William Flint for "taking away hay"^[13]; the case was reviewed on 25 September 1649^[14], and was heard again on 26 March 1650, at which time the judgement was reversed^[15]. In September 1650, Edmund was still having trouble with hay, suing William Flint again^[16]; this case was reviewed in March 1651^[11,17].

On 28 June 1649, as a result of ill-advised words, Edmund was called to account for stating that he wished Major Endicott to hear his son Mathew's court case against Goodman Edwards, because "he had given him apple trees." Edmund was required to publicly apologize for implying that he had bribed Endicott^[11,18].

Farrington Register Report

On 29 June 1653, Edward Kemp and Edmund Farrington were presented at court for being drunk^[11,19].

On 4 July 1653, "Edmond Farrington" sold to Joseph Pope and Samuel Eborne "two hundred acres of upland & meadow within the bound of Lin and two acres of meadow lying in the Great Meadow about half a mile from the 200 acres"^[23,26].

Edmund served on the Essex County Grand Jury on 28 November 1654 and 26 June 1655^[23,29]. That same year, Edmund built a corn mill on Water Hill -- the watercourse dug for this was called "Farrington's Canal".

On 22 May 1666, "Edmond Farrington of Linn..., yeoman," deeded to "my son Mathew Farrington the one-half of my cornmill with the utensils thereto belonging, with all the profits, produce & effects arising therefrom, except the toll of my son Fuller's grist, which is well & duly to be ground toll free during the life of my daughter Elizabeth his wife. I do likewise five to my son Mathew Farrington the one-half of the mill house, houses, barn & half the upland & meadow that I bought of Nicholas Browne, & half my salt marsh in the Town Marsh," in return for which Mathew Farrington will maintain his father and mother for the rest of their lives, and pay to "my son John Fuller, his heirs or assigns, the sum of ten pounds sterling at my decease."^[23,27]

On 3 December 1669, "Edmond Farrington of Linn..., yeoman," deeded to "Mathew Farrington of the same Linn...the one-half of all & singular my tide mill at Linn aforesaid, with the housen, barn & several parcels of land thereto belonging"^[23,28].

Edmund's will was written on 12 August 1667, proved in Ipswich Court on 28 March 1671 by Nathaniel Kertland, Sr., inventoried on 25d:1m(March): 1671 and attested to in Ipswich Court on 28 March 1671 by Mathew Farrington^[20].
